HISTORICAL NOTE

Alfred Mason Williams (1840-1896) was a journalist, editorial writer and scholar of Irish poetry and folklore. He was born in Taunton, Massachusetts to Lloyd Hall and Prudence King Williams. He attended the Bristol Academy and entered Brown University in 1860. During the Civil War, he enlisted as a private in the Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry and wrote letters from the front to various newspapers. In 1865, he went to Ireland as a foreign correspondent to report on the Fenian trials for the Boston Post and the New York Herald. He collected Irish broadside ballads which led to his lifelong interest in folklore. He was also interested in Irish poetry and this led to his publication of an anthology of Irish poetry in 1881. In 1875, he was hired as a reporter for the Providence Journal where he wrote editorials. In 1884 he became editor-in-chief of the paper. He started a Sunday edition in 1885 and in it he published poems and articles by Irish writers. He also made the Journal one of the strongest advocates in America for Irish home rule. After his wife died in 1886, he made a second trip to Ireland and met many young talented Irish writers including Katharine Tynan and William Butler Yeats. Williams published much of their work in the Journal and this gave many Americans weekly access to Irish literature. Williams's ill health due to malaria he contracted during the Civil War led to his retirement from the Journal in 1891 and he died five years later while on a visit to St. Kitts in the Eastern Caribbean. Having no children, he donated his entire estate, appraised at $250,000, to the Providence Public Library.

SCOPE AND CONTENTS OF THE COLLECTION

The collection includes late 19th century Irish and English broadside ballads. Of the total 972 broadsides, the vast bulk were printed in either Cork or Dublin, Ireland. Many of the Dublin broadsides were published by Peter Brerenton. Broadside ballads were printed and sold by ballad singers as well as in street fairs and markets and included the lyrics for popular songs. They were printed on one side of inexpensive paper and often included woodcut illustrations.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COLLECTION

The collection is organized into two series. Series 1 includes Irish broadside ballads; Series 2 includes English broadside ballads. Items are organized alphabetically by song title and have been directly transcribed including spelling and printing errors. In the case of broadsides with multiple songs, they are organized by the primary title. Variations or editions of the same title (obvious enough to be notable without detailed comparison) have unique identifiers. Items that appear to be duplicates are indicated with an alphabetic indicator in the item identifier.
